Jean Eliot's Letter

(Continued from Tenth Page.) tary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, the Secretary of Labor and one of the other Cabinet officials were entitled each to his own ensign to be flown at the masthead of any craft whereon he might find himself. Now, whereas this is perfectly permissable and proper, particularly in the case of Mr. Redfield, who is farafliarly known to the navy as "Spinnaker Bill" from the nautical cut of his flaming wakers, yet it gave rise to a most amusing contretemps recently.

It so happened that the three officials in question were aboard one of the government boats, steaming down the river, recently, and that the three pennants floated merrily from the masthead, or whatever is the proper place from which ensigns should float. Unfortunately, the unusual amount of bunting displayed gave the craft a strong family 'resemblance to an excursion boat and when the party passed the sundry forts along the river, there was no sign of the salutes due to so much dignity.

Even a loud blowing of whistles, to call attention to the importance of the occasion elicited no response, much to the disgust of the dignitaries aboard; and later it tur d out that there was equal consternation ashore, where the men 'n the forts were confronted with three un miliar flags end didn't know just what to do about it. However, as each of 'al was entitled to a salute of seven , a guns, perhaps it is just as well ce they didn't materialise, for it migh cave sounded suspiciously like ment. -+-

Heertainre the Secretary of War and at twitary of the Navy have been and t Cabinet members entitled to win flags, which, of course, are wn when the officials are are abouship. The other day, during gich ttry Daniels' cruise aboard the ing din with his family, he had occaodiaty, began to haul down the the ediate began to haul down the secretary's ensign, to be greeted by an indignant domand from one of the younger Daniels boys, Frank or Jonsthan z to why he did such a thing. "Mother and I are aboard," he said and was with difficulty appeared for the hurt to his dignity.

During the months that Mrs. George T. Marye is occupying her lovely home at Burlingame, Cal., she is devoting much of her time and talents to organizing benefits for the Russian Red Cross Society. Mrs. Marys, by the way, is an active member of the society and during her stay in Petrograd used to don the uniform once every week and spend the day nursing in one of the

Of all the over-the-Pourth house parties-and they must have been legion. for all week I have been hearing of new ones-none was more fun than the jolly week end with Brooke Lee and his pretty young wife as hosts. In the first place "Silver Spring," the old Lee place, is an ideal spot for entertaining, with its fine colonial house, its great trees and lovely gardens, its swimming pool and a wealth of historic association to interest the visitor. The place takes its name from a spring, crystal clear, Lee, daughter of old Francis P. Blair, of "kitchen cabinet" fame, and wife of Lieutenant, afterward Admiral I'hillips
Lee, used to listen for the sound of guns, carried from a long distance by the water, during the troubled down. where, tradition says, Elizabeth Blair the water, during the troubled days of the civil war.

This Mrs. Lee, who lived to a great age, and was a notably beloved, and respected figure in Washington, was respected figure in Washington, was Senator Blair Lee's mother and Brooke's grandmother. Senator Lee, with whom the young people make their home, was a very charming auxiliary host and the number of unemployed is being dea very charming auxiliary host and contributed tremendously to the success of the festivities.

The party began at 4 o'clock on Saturday morning, or thereabouts, most of the guests being from Elizabeth Lee's home in Prince George county and coming direct from a dance at Grange Hall in Marlboro', which took up all of Friday evening and lasted well into the wee sma' hours. Of course, the long ride in machines waked them all up, so some of the braver spirits started the party by going in swimming.

There followed several days of jollification, tennis, dancing, Bridge playing, long motor rides, and the like. And on Monday the whole crowd motored to Hyattsville for the tournament and to see the sham battle between the Silver Spring Company, of the National Guard. of which Brooke is one of the officers. and the Hyattsville company. I don't know what the official decision was, but the members of the house party were unanimously agreed that Silver Spring won-particularly as several of their number took part, filling the boots of absentee soldier boys. In the evening they all went to town to see the fireworks, and later had a rival exhibition at home, and on Tuesday morning the young people went their several ways. Of course Carol Wilson was there, Elizabeth's sister; also her cousin, Rachel Clagett, and there was another cousin, Mary Iglehart, of Baltimore, who is the prettiest thing imaginable.

and only seventeen; Chrystobal Hill, Grace Roberts, Edna Berry and "Neelle" Bowie, all of Prince George county; and Laura Ambler, of Ohio, who is now living in Washington with her mother, were some of the girls, and the men were "Dr." Billy Marbury, Kent Roberts, Dr. Adam Kemble, Billy Davis, who, by the way, is frightfully busy these days managing Senator Lee's campaign in Baltimore; Francis Hill, "Big Bill" and "Little Bill" Roberts, and a number of others. Young Blair took the wind out of the sails of the other men by introducing the fox trot, as it is danced there—he is really a beautiful dancer—and proving the lion of the occasion with the girls.

I never knew people sorrier to go home, but fortunately a good many of the crowd will come together again at the dance, which is scheduled for Sigturday evening at the Mariboro Town Hall.

day evening at the Mariboro Town Hall.

Susan, I must have a new hat, I feet it coming on and some of the attractive chapeaux I have seen recently have but strengthened my nefarioua resolve. I passed Hildagarde Hurley the other day, running her own machine and wearing a great white felt hat, carelessly becoming in shape and faced with purple velvet, and yesterday morning I talked with Mailory Church, whose small hat of rose plak silk, faced with white straw, was decidedly becoming, and most fetching. I think I needs must have a pink one—but sad to say this is Sunday, I wish you were here to help me make the selection.

Ever fondly yours,

JEAN ELIOT.

Offsetting in measure these favorable factors is Germany's reply to President Wilson's second note relative to the of the rights of neutral shippers.

While representatives of the Adminis-tration have so far refrained from expressing opinion of the imperial gov-ernment's attitude as set forth in the diplomatic document, it is generally regarded in official circles as unsatisfac-

Financial circles, however, are in-clined to the view that the pacific tone of the reply precludes possibility of a German-American crists. Its members find the note unsatisfactory principally from the fact that further prolonged parleys seem unavoidable.

The effect of an unfavorable answer, the terms of which were so couched as to aim as the avoidance of a break in diplomatic relations, will not be reflected materially in the condition of general business, but will visit its depressing influence upon the security markets.

Since the conversations between the two governments first began, following the sinking of the Lusitania, the business of the great New York stock exchange has been held in check. Profeschange has been held in check. Protes-sional traders were loath to make heavy commitments while there was still pos-sibility of the diplematic relations of the two countries becoming strained to the breaking point, and the investing public has been inclined to follow this

The steel industry has rapidly improved, and the demand for its products has now reached proportions where that trade is bordering on a boom.
